I. Course Overview

1. Course Description

This is an introductory course into South Korea's gender relations in the development perspective. This class will introduce contemporary and historical gender relations of Korea and also include women's policies and programs. Students will have a chance to learn about basic gender concepts, how gender relations have evolved in the historical path of Korea and how various women's policies and law have affected the real lives of women and men in South Korea. By critically reviewing successful as well as controversial policies and programs in Korea students will gain insights into their respective societies which can provide meaningful reference for policy design for their respective countries. The course includes women's policies and programs from various sectors, gender relations in the realm of economic, education, employment, reproductive health and population, political, GBV and gender mainstreaming. The class will also discuss the recent conflict around gender issues.

Readings will be assigned to each topic which is strongly recommended to be completed prior to the lecture. Presentations will be prepared on the given topic by students and corresponding group discussion will be held in class to share ideas from various experiences and backgrounds. We also plan to visit one or two gender institutions to learn of real cases of gender policy and programs.
